BEER SELECTION

Beer is one of mankind's oldest beverages. Thousands of years ago when humans learned how to plant, grow and harvest grains for food, it did not take them long to stumble upon the fermentation process.

A process which had the ability to transform water into a very palatable drink and so the first beer had been discovered.

We qualify beer as either a lager or an ale, depending on the fermenting process. Today, most beer is brewed from malted barley, although wheat, corn & rice can also be used. In addition to hops, a variety of flavors can also be added made from herbs or fruits for a more modern take.

RUM SELECTION

Rum lovers around the world owe a great debt to a simple plant: Sugar Cane. Rum is made from pure Sugarcane, in a process that is partly science and mostly art.

Most of the rare distilleries still in activity cultivate its own sugarcane. They are carefully selected & grown exclusively for the production of the rums: here lies the first secret of its quality. The color of the spirit is primarily determined by the amount of time it has spent aging in oak barrels.

The longer it's been aged, the more color and flavor it picks up from the wood. As long as the angels are watching our rums, we have all our time...

VODKA

The go to spirit of Russians & a versatile base for cocktails, Vodka's popularity is undeniable. Unlike whisky or tequila, vodka can be distilled from, well, pretty much anything. In addition to more standard potato & wheat bases, vodkas made from corn, whey and even fruit are now gaining momentum. Even though vodka is often referred to as a "neutral" spirit, its base ingredient still impacts its flavor & texture. For instance, corn produces a subtle sweetness, while fruit-based vodkas exhibit, yes, fruity notes. They all taste different, which means they're all worth seeking out.

WHISKY SELECTION

You might be wondering what the difference is between whiskey & whisky or bourbon or scotch.

The type of whisky or whiskey is determined by the grain use in the distillation process, Different grains produce different taste characteristics... Bourbon is a type of American whiskey made from corn. Another determinant is where it is produced. Whiskey from Ireland and U.S is usually spelled with the «e» contrary to whisky from Scotland, Canada, Japan & else-where which are spelled without «e». Couple that with varying distillation methods by country, region and producer, and you get a wide range of flavors from sweet to spicy and from smooth to bold and Smokey.

GIN SELECTION

Gin is a liquor made from grain that has been infused with Juniper berries and other botanicals. Juniper berries, bluish berries with a piney flavor and aroma, are the predominant flavoring for all gin. The combination of botanicals, along with the production method, is what distinguishes one brand of gin from another. As its name indicates, dry gin is not sweet. It is usually aromatic and light in flavor and body.
